

Not of Sound Mind

Lance Clarke

Frighteningly, a psychotic episode can happen to anyone for any reason a disturbing and upsetting event, an accident, or the slow reduction of mental capacity through drugs or alcohol. The outcome is the same: extreme anger, terror or chaos in the mind. It was the case in Essex, where someone was committing horrible murders with a hint of revenge as the motive. But who was doing it and why? The police are taunted and the issue becomes a national concern as people question the effectiveness of the government on law and order. As is always the way, events such as this burst like a firework display, scattering incendiary elements in all directions, lighting up the cracks in politics and personal lives, and exposing society to prejudices of all kinds. All because of one cruel act.
